Can Social Media help understand the political (election) agenda of the candidates to the general masses ?

A study using Twitter for Americal Election 2020

Bishwaraj Bhattarai

Abstract

This study aims to analyze twitter data (tweets) of the major candidates of the Americal Presidential Election 2020, to study if social media feed can be used to understand the major talking points/election agenda of the candidates. The twitter data is used to create Word-Clouds to see which topics are focused. Results indicate that it is difficult to understand the priorities/agenda, at least in advance leading up to the election. While similar analysis later, in the days leading up to the election, might suggest a more congruent understanding of the candidates' election agenda/priorities, much of the tweets at early stage seem spontaneous reactions and thoughts rather than thought-out plans or strategies.

Motivation

Social media is increasingly seen as the primary medium of communication, including the transfer of news, and political agenda to the general public. Major news or announcements increasingly break through social media, which is leading the public to believe that all that appears on social media is serious and factual. The objective of this study is to explore if the social media (twitter) can be or rather has been, used as a medium to have serious and critical communication among political figures – election candidates, especially for conveying their priorities and election agendas. This can be useful for the general public in assessing how much faith one can put on the social media feed to form their political understanding.

Dataset(s)

This study uses publicly available tweets from 4 major candidates in the Amecial Presidential Election-2020. 3 candiates from the Democratic Party – Bernie Sanders - @BernieSanders, Elizabeth Warren - @ewarren, and Joe Biden - @JoeBiden, along with the sitting president – Donald Trump - @realDonaldTrump 's tweets have been used. Most recent (as of December 15, 2000-GMT+5:45) 3200 tweets (twitter limit) from each candidates have been extracted for this study.

Data Preparation and Cleaning

First, I had to extract the relevant text from the JSON format returned by the twitter API

Then the text was converted to a list of strings and irrelevant words (stopwords) were removed. This list of stopwords had to be updated with each candidate to remove the words related to their own names, etc.

Finally the format of the word-could was also changed from a '2020' mask to a round mask for better and more comprehensible visualization.
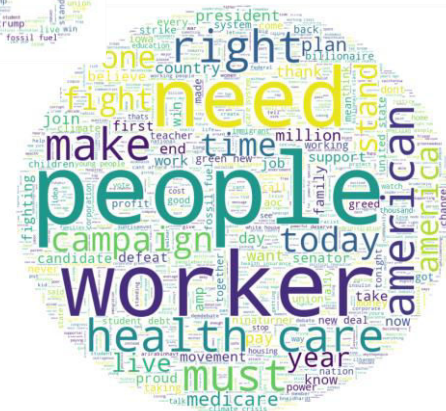

Research Question(s)

Can Social Media help general public understand the political (election) agenda of the candidates?
Are the political agendas reflected on the tweets of the Candidates?

Methods

This study will analyze the recent 3,200 tweets from each of the 4 major presidential candidates in the American Presidential election 2020 and crate a word-could of the most frequently used words to visualize / understand the priorities and the election agenda of the candidates. Since this is a text based data, fairly limited in quantity, and in widely varying topics/issues, sentiment analysis or similar Machine Learning study is less appropriate and simple word clouds are very effective to outline the general talking points.
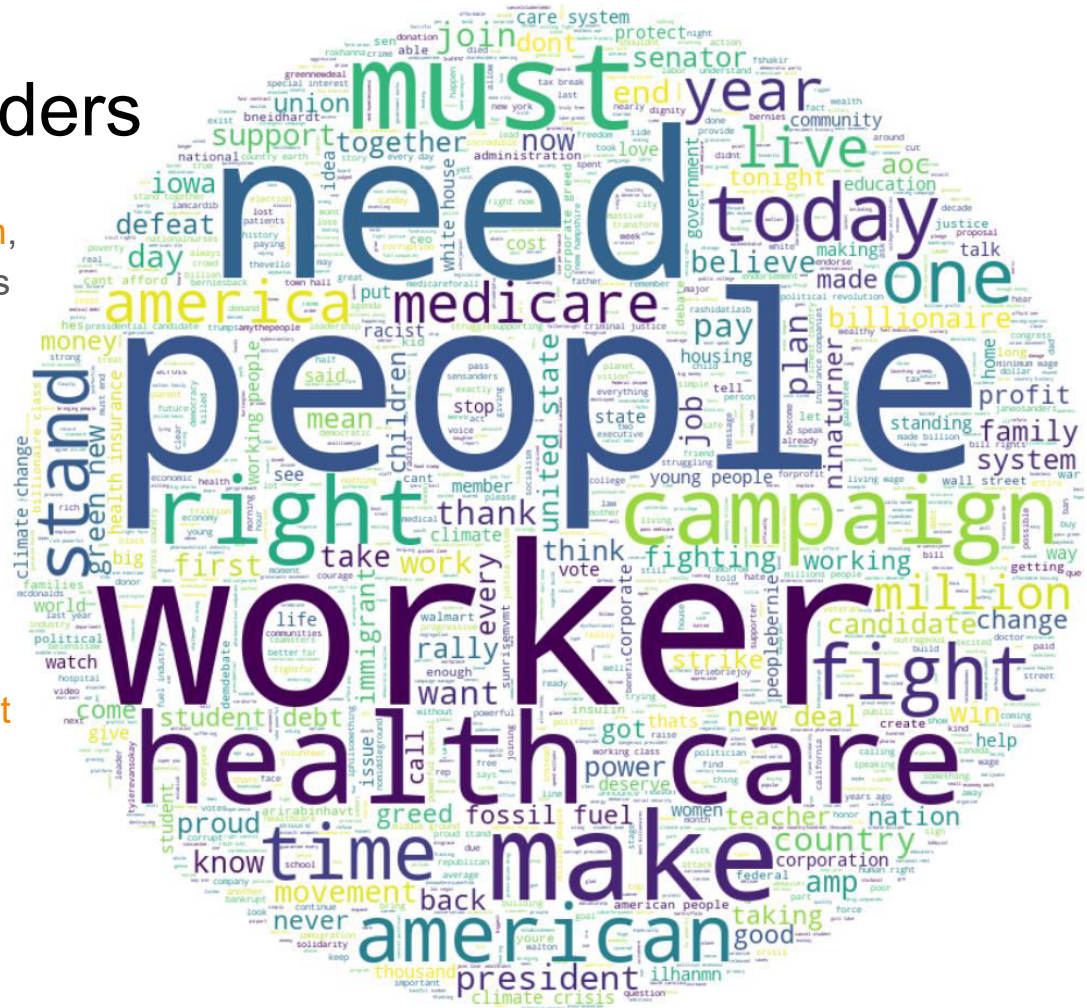

Findings 1 – Bernie Sanders

Words like people, worker, health care, american, etc. are most prominent indicating the candidates focus.

There are some words with little value addition, like must, need, one, make, etc.

Some of the words that form key agenda are included but not prominent like medicare, student debt, green new (deal), fossil fuel, climate crisis, etc.

While some key agenda are not prominent, the tweets give some idea on the election agenda.

Findings 1 – Elizabeth Warren

Words like people, plan, work, american, etc. are most prominent indicating the candidates focus.

There are some words with little value addition, like must, need, one, thank, etc.

Some of the words that form key agenda are included but not prominent like public school, job, worker, black community, etc.

Overall, it is difficult to understand the priorities/agenda.
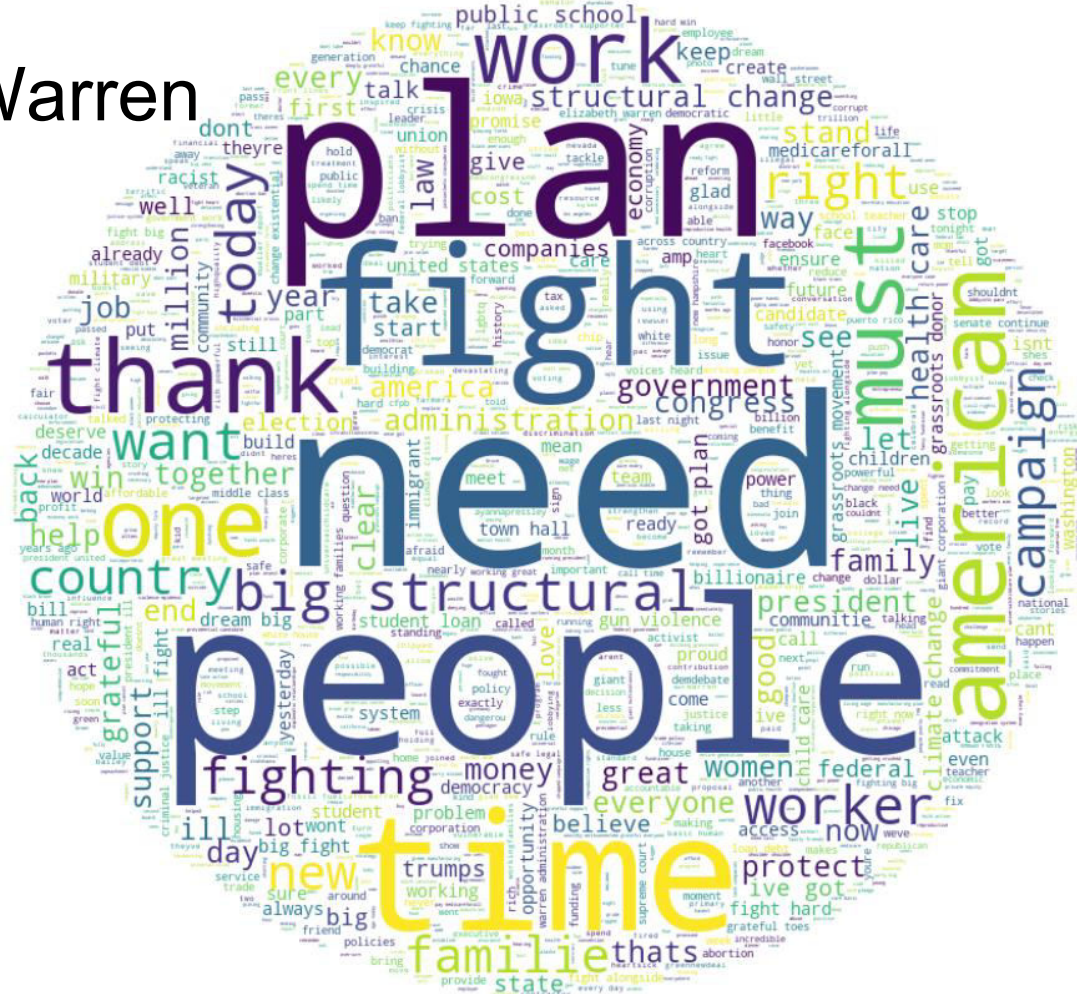

Findings 3 – Joe Biden

Words like american, country, middle class, etc. are most prominent suggesting some focus on the topics but difficult to identify

There are some words with little value addition on the agenda like know, need, one, president obama, obama etc.

Some of the words that form key agenda are included but not prominent like health care, tax cut, job, women, community, affordable care, climate change, etc.

It is not easy to understand priorities or agenda.
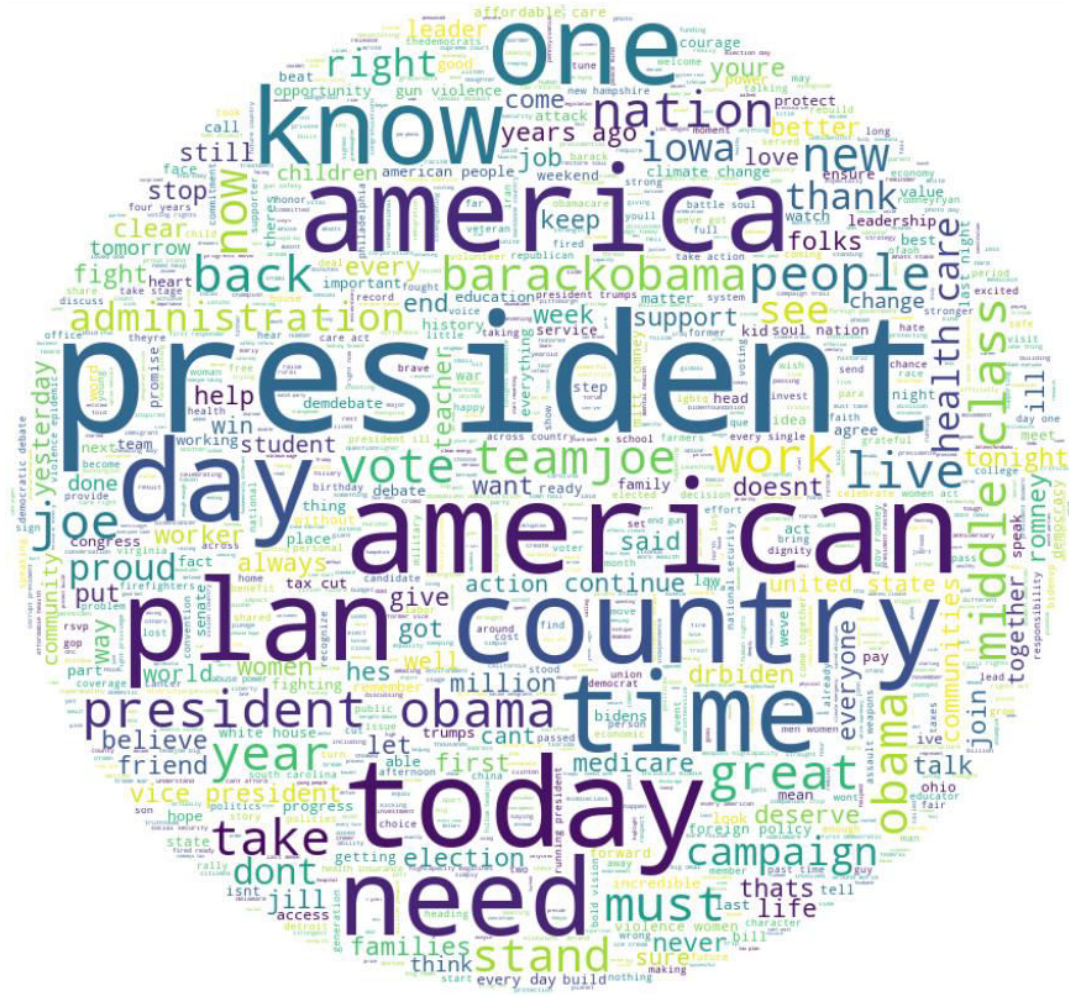

Findings 4 – Donald Trump

Being a sitting president, it is expected that the tweets may not be as agenda focused given priorities of current administration indiacted by words like democrat, impeachment, ukraine, whistleblower, job etc.

There are some words with little value addition, like great, new, now, want, etc.

Some of the words that form key agenda are included but not prominent like fake news, economy, military, china, turkey, media, etc.

Thus, the tweets are not well indicative of the key election agenda/priorities.
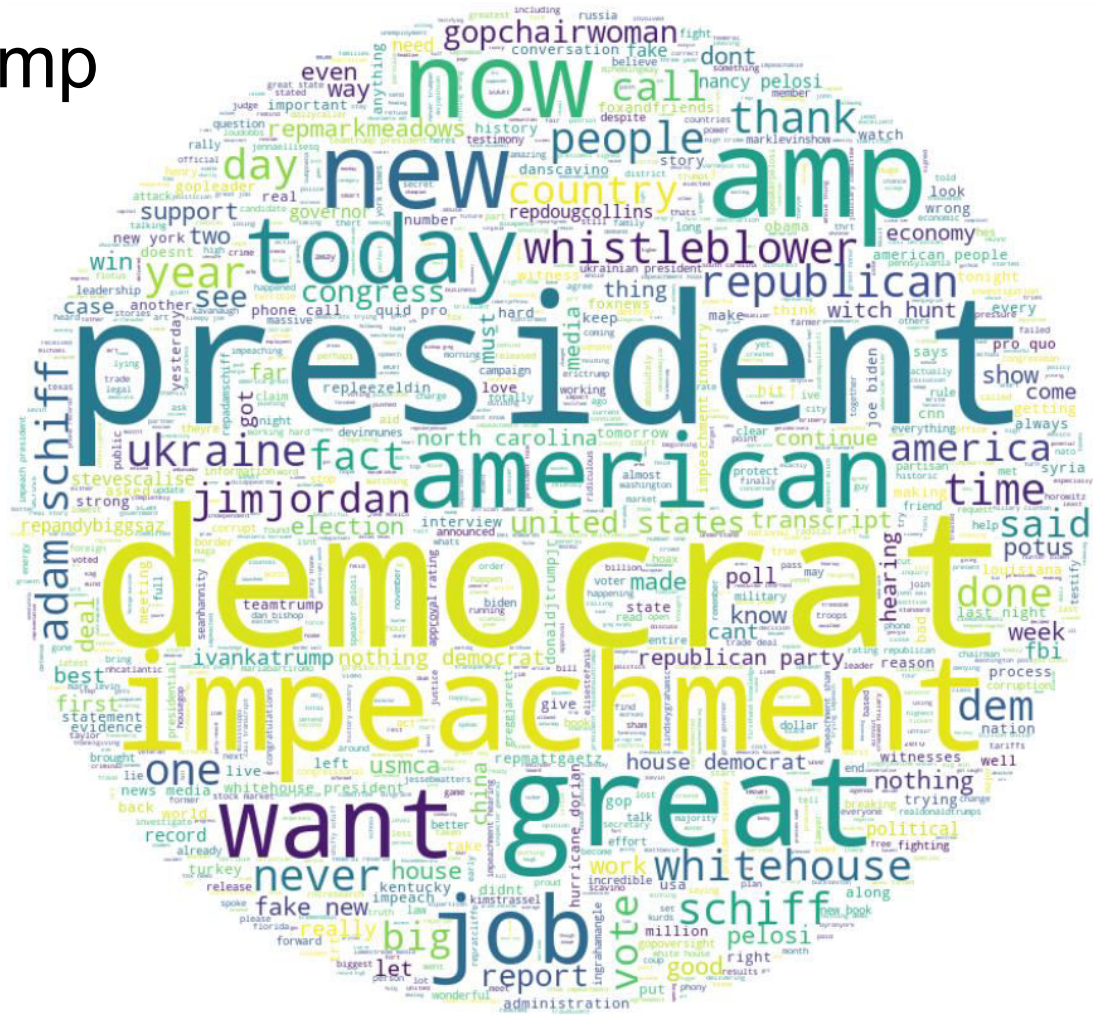

Limitations

The data source is ineherently limited by the number of tweets that can be accessed for free. Further, this study could be extended by analyzing texts from the speeches from rallies and campaigns leading up to the election.

Conclusions

It can be seen that not all candidates may be using social media (twitter) equally to deliver key messages and agenda leading to the election. For instance, it was relatively more apparent and easier to comprehend in case of Bernie Sanders, while the tweets from the current president seemed least focused on communicating the key agenda as he, understandably, is more focused on imminent issues related to his adminstration.

One thing that's very apparent in all the candidates is that, while the key election agenda like health care, education, tax etc. may be mentioned, but they are not always focused highly in the tweets, and most of the tweets convey general messages/spontaneous reactions rather delivering strategic messages.

Thus, it can be suggested that depending on social media alone for foming political understanding or learning about key election agenda may not be adeqaute, at least not in months' advance.

Step 2: Import the necessary packages

In [1]:

```python
import numpy as np
import matplotlib.pyplot as plt import re
from twython import Twython
from PIL import Image
from wordcloud import WordCloud, STOPWORDS
from IPython.display import Image as im

Step 3: Collect the data

The next step is to connect to the Twitter API with the Twython package in order to extract the raw Tweets from the chosen user handle.

In [2]:

```python
#Connect to Twitter
APP_KEY = "..."
APP_SECRET = "...."
twitter = Twython(APP_KEY, APP_SECRET)

We can now call the function on a user timeline. Note that Twitter limits how far one can go back on a user's timeline, which is 3200 at this point in time for free tier. While not as simple as the other parts of creating the word cloud, the following block of code checks for the most recent id and uses that as a placeholder to get the next batch of 200 tweets.

In [7]:

```python
#Get timeline
user_timeline=twitter.get_user_timeline(screen_name='BernieSanders',count=1)
#get most recent id
last_id = user_timeline[0]['id']-1
for i in range(16):
    batch = twitter.get_user_timeline(screen_name='BernieSanders',count=200, max_id=last_id)
    user_timeline.extend(batch)
```

In [8]:

user_timeline[0:5]

Out[8]:

We can see that the "text" field of each tweet contains the information we need. Furthermore, it appears that our timeline data is a list of dictionaries, so we can iterate through the list and grab each value with the "text" key.

In [9]:

```python
#Extract textfields from tweets
raw_tweets = []
for tweets in user_timeline:
    raw_tweets.append(tweets['text'])

While this is an interesting collection of tweets, it does not generate any addiitonal value compared to just scrolling the tweets manually. So let's clean this for analysis.

Step 4: Clean the data

At this point, we have our raw data - all URL links, special characters, emojis, and extra white spaces. We'll remove them on a case by case basis.

In [11]:

```python
#Create a string form of our list of text
raw_string = ''.join(raw_tweets)
no_links = re.sub(r'http\S+', '', raw_string) no_unicode = re.sub(r"\\[a-z][a-z]?[0-9]+", '', no_links)
no_special_characters = re.sub('[^A-Za-z ]+', '', no_unicode)

Now we get rid of words like 'a', 'an', 'the', 'being' etc. called StopWords

In [12]:

```python
Set stopwords
stopwords = set(STOPWORDS)

In [13]:

```python
words = no_special_characters.split(" ") words = [w for w in words if len(w) > 2]   # ignore a, an, be, ...
words = [w.lower() for w in words]
words = [w for w in words if w not in stopwords]
words_bern = ','.join(words) # Create clean string of words

Step 5: Visualize Data with Mask

First we obtain the mask image that will outline the wordcloud

In [20]:

```python
mask = np.array(Image.open('/Users/bishw/Desktop/DataScience/DS_UCsd/1 Python/Final Project/2020.png'))

Create the word cloud instance (note that the documentation requires that the text be in a string format):

In [11]:

```python
Create word cloud
wc_bern = WordCloud(background_color="white", max_words=2000, mask=mask)
wc_bern.generate(words_bern)

Out[11]:
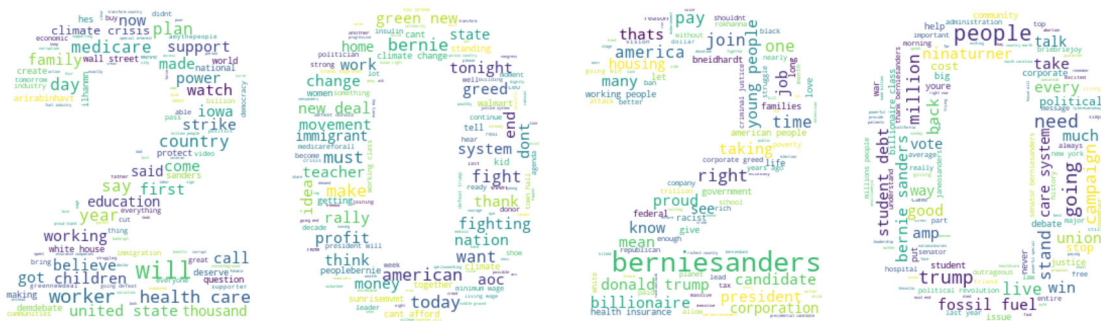

```
<wordcloud.wordcloud.WordCloud at 0x2cc0c9cb550>

And finally sdisplay the image:

In [13]:

```python
f = plt.figure(figsize=(70,70))
#f.add_subplot(1,2, 1)
#plt.imshow(mask, cmap=plt.cm.gray, interpolation='bilinear')
#plt.title('Original Stencil', size=40)
#plt.axis("off")
plt.imshow(wc_bern, interpolation='bilinear')
plt.title('Twitter Generated Cloud', size=100)
plt.axis("off")
plt.show()
```

Twitter Generated Cloud

Step 6: Repeat for Trump

In [22]:

```python
user_timeline=twitter.get_user_timeline(screen_name='realDonaldTrump',count=1)
#get most recent id
last_id = user_timeline[0]['id']-1
for i in range(16):
    batch = twitter.get_user_timeline(screen_name='realDonaldTrump',count=200, max_id=last_id)
    last_id = user_timeline[-1]['id'] - 1

Twitter Generated Cloud

Step 7: Refine the visualization

While this gives us some idea about the major talking points, it is still not very useful to drive a lot of meaningful insight. We shall try if condensing the wordcloud may help

First, let's add some additional words like 'Bernie', 'Sanders', 'Trump', 'Donald Trump' etc., which do not provide any valuable insights on the policy and agenda of the candidates, and add additional words to the stopwords.

In [14]:

```python
Add stopwords
#word_list = ['bernie','sanders','bernie sanders', 'realdonaldtrump', 'donald', 'trump', 'say', 'many', 'much', 'nancy','nancy pelosi','pelosi']
#for i in word_list:
 #   stopwords.add(word_list[i])
stopwords.add('say') stopwords.add('bernie') stopwords.add('sanders') stopwords.add('berniesanders')
stopwords.add('realdonaldtrump')
stopwords.add('trump') stopwords.add('many') stopwords.add('much') stopwords.add('nancypelosi') stopwords.add('donald') stopwords.add('trump')
stopwords.add('will') stopwords.add('going')

Creating new word cloud with additional stopwords - Bernie Sanders

In [15]:

```python
Create WordCloud Object - BernieSanders
instantiate a word cloud object
wc_bern = WordCloud(
    background_color='white',
    max_words=2000,
    stopwords=stopwords,
    mask = mask

generate the word cloud

<ipython-input-15-b85320e1acb2> in <module>
      5         max_words=2000,
      6         stopwords=stopwords,
----> 7         mask = mask
      8 )

NameError: name 'mask' is not defined

In [41]:

```
Display word cloud
fig.set_figwidth(20) # set width
fig.set_figheight(15) # set height

plt.imshow(wc_bern, interpolation='bilinear')
plt.axis('off')
plt.show()
```

Let's see if the visualization looks better in a different i.e. circular mask.

In [16]:

mask2 = np.array(Image.open('/Users/bishw/Desktop/DataScience/DS_UCsd/1 Python/Final Pr oject/round.png'))
Recreating the wordcloud.

In [17]:

```python
Create WordCloud Object - BernieSanders - Circular mask
instantiate a word cloud object
wc_bern = WordCloud(
    background_color='white',
    max_words=2000,
    stopwords=stopwords,
    mask = mask2

generate the word cloud
wc_bern.generate(words_bern)
fig.set_figheight(20) # set height

plt.imshow(wc_bern, interpolation='bilinear')
plt.axis('off')
plt.show()

Repeating the process for Donald Trump

In [28]:

```python
Create WordCloud Object - Donald Trump
instantiate a word cloud object
wc_trump = WordCloud(
    background_color='white',
    max_words=2000,
    stopwords=stopwords,
    mask = mask

generate the word cloud

wc_trump.generate(words_trump)

plt.imshow(wc_trump, interpolation='bilinear')
plt.axis('off')
plt.show()
```

Let's also see the word cloud in circular mask, which is more easier to understand

In [29]:

Create WordCloud Object - Donald Trump
instantiate a word cloud object
wc_trump = WordCloud(
    background_color='white',
    max_words=2000,
    stopwords=stopwords,
    mask = mask2
)

generate the word cloud
wc_trump.generate(words_trump)

fig.set_figwidth(20) # set width

plt.imshow(wc_trump, interpolation='bilinear')
plt.axis('off')
plt.show()

While these stopwords and visualization seem to work fine, it feels like on-boarding more candidates in the presidential race, esp. Senator Warren and VP Joe Biden might be useful for more understanding of the political spectrum.
